Six Tips If You Receive an IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes

The Internal Revenue Service will be mailing tax collection notices this month to collect back taxes. If you get one of these IRS tax collection notices, you will need to take action quickly with the help of a tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist in order to protect yourself, your loved ones, your assets and your job.

If you get one of those terrifying IRS tax collection notices to collect back taxes, this tax collection notice is generally the last warning shot the IRS will fire before they empty your bank accounts or garnish 30-75% of your future paychecks. This will leave you with pennies on the dollar to live on until the IRS's estimation of what you owe them in back taxes is fulfilled. You need IRS tax help...fast!

IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes Tip #1: Don't Panic, Get the Right Help! IRS tax help is available if you receive an IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes, but you need to know who to ask. Once an IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes arrives, many people try to work with the IRS themselves to resolve back tax problems, and get themselves into deeper trouble by unintentionally incriminating themselves.

You wouldn't defend yourself in a court of law without legal counsel? This IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes is no different. You'll need IRS tax help from a tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist at your side to ensure that this IRS notice is dealt with effectively.

The IRS is the most brutal collection agency on the planet. Do not go into battle with them over an IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes without expert IRS tax help in your corner. Unlike that seemingly friendly IRS agent, your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist is there to help you and you alone.

IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes Tip #2: Delay Collections

IRS levies are the result of poor or no communication between taxpayers and the IRS. Your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist will fix that. He or she is an expert at the ins and outs of the IRS and will handle all communications with them on your behalf.

Once you've gotten an IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes, pick up your phone immediately and call a tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist for IRS tax relief before your career, bank accounts and credit rating all disappear. With the tax collection notice to collect back taxes in hand, they can call a temporary halt to the proceedings in most cases and allow you to get ready for the battle ahead.

IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes Tip #3: File and Appeal

If you've ignored the IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes, there may already be an IRS levy filed on your bank accounts or your assets. Your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist can give you IRS tax relief by helping you file an IRS collection appeal to remove your levy or at least modify it.

The goal of the IRS Appeal Division is to settle back tax disputes between the IRS and taxpayers. Do you know how to do this? Your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist will provide IRS tax help, they'll create an appeal and deliver it to an IRS Appeals Officer who is required to make a decision on your back taxes within five business days.

IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes Tip #4: Be Placed in "Currently Not Collectible"

Even the IRS recognizes their limitations in collecting back taxes from some individuals. If you are indigent, chronically or terminally ill or suffering from other extreme circumstances, you may be placed in the IRS's Currently Not Collectible file. Your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist can help you determine if you fit the criteria, and arrange for you to receive this designation.

IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes Tip #5: Negotiate a Payment Plan

One of the most common responses to an IRS tax collection notice to collect back taxes is an IRS payment plan.

Once you or your accountant has determined how much money in back taxes you actually owe, which may differ radically from what the IRS thinks you owe, your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist can negotiate a payment plan and bring you some IRS tax relief. It is not an ideal situation because interest and penalties will keep accruing until the debt is discharged in its entirety, but at least you'll be free from the threat of IRS levies and wage garnishments.

IRS Tax Collection Notice to Collect Back Taxes Tip #6: Offer in Compromise Tax Settlements

Another way to deal with an IRS tax collection notice is with an Offer in Compromise Tax Settlement where they might accept a discounted lump sum payment and consider the debt cleared.

But it's not easy. This is where your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist really earns their fee providing IRS tax help. The IRS won't accept just any Offer in Compromise. They need to be convinced that your Offer in Compromise is their best and only hope of getting the maximum amount of money out of you that they can.

Your tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist has done this many times before and is familiar with what Offer in Compromise tax settlements the IRS, in general, have accepted recently, offering you a clue as to what they'll accept from you.

A tax attorney or Certified Tax Resolution Specialist is your best and really only hope of having your federal back tax issue resolved once and for all. Their IRS tax help will allow you to get back to enjoying life without worrying about when the next tax collection notice to collect back taxes will be coming in the mail.
